GENERAL EXPLANATIONS ABOUT ASTROLOGICAL INTERPRETATION

Astrology can enlighten our behavior and clarify correlations in life. However, it can't and shouldn't pin a person down. An astrological birth picture consists of symbols that have been translated into words and concrete examples in the following text. For the sake of clarity, some examples have been exaggerated.

What astrology has to say can be explained by using examples. You have different aspects of your personality like your will, feelings, rational mind, etc. Imagine these to be actors who are staging the play of "life" together. Astrology describes the actors, their qualities and weaknesses, and their relationships with each other. But astrology has little to say about the play that is being acted. You decide this with your free will.

Experienced actors to whom you can constantly give new stage directions are necessary for a good play. The more you know the needs of your actors, the more you can bring them together into a harmonious and unified "play" and let them express themselves on your life's stage. The following pages will be a guide for doing this.

When reading them, you will discover contradictions. For example: one section describes the need for a calm and stable relationship, and another section says that you need stimulation and variety within a relationship. Such a contradiction contains the demanding challenge to express both opposites.

The following text is not a "fortune-telling horoscope" because you alone are the architect of your own destiny. The horoscope describes the "raw material" that you have available.

APPEARANCE

The Ascendent symbolizes the "display window" or the "mask" of your personality, which means the qualities that you primarily exhibit to the outside world and other people initially perceive in you. It indicates an area with which you are familiar on the one hand, but challenges you throughout your lifetime to intensively develop your personality on the other hand.

Ascendent in Virgo

A Practical and Reliable Impression

With the Ascendent in Virgo, you are an orderly person. You are reliable and punctual. Any club would like to have you responsible for its club treasury and bookkeeping. You make a reliable, practical, and objective impression. Your love of details lets you dutifully take care of even the most inconspicuous aspects of everyday life. Life challenges you time and again to not only show objectivity, reason, and a sense of reality as a "mask" to the outside world but also let these attributes become your inner qualities. By more or less playing the role of the person who is practical and realistic, you form your character in this direction. As a result, you will be solidly anchored in everyday life.

However, if you scrutinize your behavior a bit more closely, you will discover that you often cling to an exaggerated everyday life. Everything must be orderly and moderate. An excess of this smothers any joy in life.

The Ascendent is like a pair of glasses through which you can perceive the surrounding world with a special hue. You have an eye for the details, the individual parts. You can judge a situation according to the criteria of what is possible, useful, and practical. Initially, you concentrate so much on the individual trees that you often can no longer see the forest in its totality. You have a good gift of observation, so even the little things hardly escape your attention. Yet, it's important for you not to get stuck on them. You judge many things on the basis of a cost-benefit relationship. Only when you not only include the material values but also joy, enthusiasm, meaning, and other criteria that are immeasurable can your ability of making the best from the given circumstances fully develop.

ESSENTIAL NATURE AND WILL

Just as the Sun is the central star of the solar system in astronomical terms, it also symbolizes the essential nature of a human being in astrology. Its position in the birth picture tells us something about our ego-consciousness, about our will and the way in which we shape our lives.

Sun in Sagittarius

Rising Above Your Own Limitations

In the innermost heart of your being, you have a very idealistic attitude. You see life as a path that leads you to a higher goal. This goal may be a spiritual or a material one. Just as the symbol of the Sagittarius, the arrow, points upward, you strive for higher things in your mind.

You have great powers of imagination and a type of inner myth that accompanies you step by step through daily life and gives you much optimism and self-assurance. However, if your inner vision deviates too much from reality and your goals have been set too high, you will be forced to experience repeatedly that banal everyday life holds you captive in its clutches. The powers of imagination can have a great many effects. However, your strength can only develop positively when the imagined goal lies within the realm of the possible. Otherwise, the inner images will be like a balloon that flies off into the unreachable heights and leaves behind disappointment and dissatisfaction.

You are an active person. When you are convinced of something, your strong and skilled will also leads you to the goal. In the process, you will hardly run your head against a brick wall but always remain flexible and adapt to changing circumstances. There is no denying that you have a healthy cleverness - similar to that of the fox in the animal fables. You want to pass your ideas on to others. Justice, freedom of opinion, and your own truth are your high causes. Your role models are teacher personalities in the broadest sense.

Sun in the Fourth House

A Family-Like Environment

You would like to show the qualities described above in an intimate, family-like circle of people and express them in a caring "parental function." Taking care of yourself and others and creating an atmosphere in which you and other people feel well is presumably very important to you. Your nature practically blossoms in an area related to the family, traditions, the home, a sense of security, or feelings. You find the path to yourself not in the hectic outside world, but in an intimate environment. This is a matter of often asking yourself what you need emotionally in order to feel well and accepted, in addition to finding the source within yourself that gives your life meaning and direction. At the same time, your own family or a family-like environment can also support you and impart to you the necessary sense of security and safeness you need.

Sun/Mercury in Conjunction

Clear, Subjective Opinions

Will and reason are inseparably connected here. You consider what you want, think your projects through from A to Z, and formulate them clearly. You are presumably skilled at representing your opinions in conversations. Other people's convictions rarely change your mind. Since reason is practically in the service of your will, you probably have a considerable talent when it comes to leading conversations, among other things.

In addition to the positive aspects described above, this connection of reason and will also has its difficult components. Since the rational mind so closely cooperates with the will, it can also lose some of its objectivity. It may happen that you - without noticing it - judge a situation too much on the basis of your personal perspective. You tend to consider and represent your opinion as the irrefutable truth.

Sun/Jupiter in Conjunction

The Sense for Greatness

You have a sense of initiative and optimism. Your open and tolerant attitude makes things easier for you in life. In a generous and uncomplicated manner, you always do the right thing. You have a holistic perspective of a situation and practically see the direction in which things are headed. Apart from the tendency to overestimate yourself, your decisions are probably be right most of the time. You have an idealistic attitude and want to identify with something larger than yourself. The company, the nation, or an ideology are some examples of what your idealism may be related to.

Your need for a pleasant and generous lifestyle can let you become a master of the art of living who keeps restrictive working conditions at arm's length. If another aspect of your being tends toward discipline and responsibility, the need for a generous lifestyle may also cause you to create the foundation for material affluence through work.

Sun/Saturn in Tension

The Expectation of a Perfect Lifestyle

You are rather strict with yourself. You actually would like to radiate with your qualities. But, at the same time, you fear not being a match for the demands. You know where your limitations are. If, at some point, you should disregard them, someone else is certain to come along and set limits for you. In this way, confrontations with authority figures may occur. You want to be a respected personality yourself and therefore don't like it when someone else tells you what to do. A low level of self-confidence or a higher inner standard of perfection have a crippling effect when you don't allow yourself to be a person with faults and weaknesses.

Responsibility should be a familiar theme for you. However, fears of failure could also lead you to keep out of things as much as possible. In the reverse case, you may also obligate yourself in so many ways that you sometimes have the impression that all the responsibility is weighing on your shoulders. You must learn to neither burden yourself with too much nor too little. In the right dose, a sense of duty will prove to be a valuable guardrail on your path in life. You have the best predispositions for enormous discipline and endurance and can translate almost every project into reality.

FEELINGS AND TEMPERAMENT

The Moon symbolizes the emotional, childlike/passive, and receptive principle. It stands for the needy part of us that would like to live according to its feelings and spontaneously reacts according to desire or reluctance. In this part of our personality, we are sensitive and impressionable, perceive moods, and need a sense of security and warmth. We can imagine this part to be like a small child within us. If it gets what it needs, we feel good and lively. However, we often have to go through periods of stagnation and discontentment before we recognize and satisfy its needs.

The Moon embodies the feminine principle and also stands for the aspect within us that, full of caring willingness, would like to be a "mother" in the broadest sense of the word. It wants to look after others and create a sense of security.

Moon in Aquarius

An Independent Nature

You are open for new things and love diversity. Being where the action is puts you in good spirits. You need a great deal of free space. Even the idea of letting yourself be roped into something for a longer period of time will probably trigger an unpleasant feeling within you. So you tend to often stay at a safe distance and just "look over the fence" instead of getting completely involved. This emotional distance protects you from emotional entanglements and boring obligations; but, at the same time, it keeps you from experiencing emotional depth and attachment. You take great liberties for yourself, probably value your independence a great deal, and simultaneously miss the warmth and support of close attachment with other people.

Because of your secure feeling of being an individualist and unique, you don't necessarily react within the framework of social norms. You may enjoy being original and unusual. When someone wants to obligate you to something or exerts pressure on you, you quickly find things to be too close. You prefer to voluntarily commit yourself than to do so under compulsion. There is a rebellious vein within you, together with the ability of recognizing and leaving behind outdated structures.

You feel good when you are with people who have similar interests and viewpoints. You want to be understood and valued as an equal. Communication, intellectual stimulation, equality, and - quite obviously - a great deal of personal freedom are necessities for you.

Moon in the Sixth House

The Need for a Pleasant Everyday Life

You would like to include the emotional qualities described above in your everyday life. It's important to you to integrate your feelings, joy, annoyance, sadness, and all of your emotional reactions in the everyday work of your job or family. This means that you work together with people, possibly with children, or in a social-welfare or social occupation. If the working climate appeals to you and you feel good there, then you will really "show off your stuff." If you feel the environment to be rather cool and barren, it's hard for you to really blossom there. Like a plant put into the wrong location, you can't develop the qualities you actually have within you. For this reason, an appropriate and agreeable working atmosphere is very important for you.

Feelings and physical sensations are closely related to each other. You may react to stress and aggravation with stomach complaints or other physical symptoms. This correlation between the body and the feelings also manifests itself in the reverse direction: healthy nutrition and meticulous body care will considerably increase your feeling of well-being. In the process, the daily, almost ritual motions of caring for your body and eating the right food give you a pleasant sense of security.

Moon/Venus in a Harmonious Aspect

Closeness, Tenderness, and Well-Being

A world without suffering and problems is what you would most like to have. A sense of security is important to you. You value a harmonious and familiar environment. Your home is probably a place of warmth and coziness for you. You know how to furnish your surroundings with much love and good taste. Music, a good meal, and other pleasures are things that you appreciate.

In relationships, you seek closeness and togetherness. You are a kind person, charming and adaptable. You don't particularly like arguing and harsh words. Even when you should actually defend yourself, you behave in a passive manner.

Since these qualities aren't particularly encouraged in a man by our society, it's possible that you will only partly recognize yourself in these lines. Above all, you seek these qualities in relationships. You probably value charm, closeness, and adaptability very much in your partner. Perhaps you like to have your partner look after a mutual harmonious domesticity.

COMMUNICATION AND THOUGHT

Mercury symbolizes the area of our personality related to thinking, information, and communication. The position of Mercury in a birth picture throws light on a person's way of thinking, preferred interests, and learning methods, as well as language and rhetorical abilities.

Mercury in Sagittarius

Power of Imagination and Conviction

Your thinking is broadminded and oriented toward the future. When you mentally master a situation, such as becoming familiar with a new field of knowledge, you first get a general idea and attempt to grasp the situation comprehensively. You prefer to leave the detail work up to others. In your tendency to think subjectively, you often generously overlook the finer points.

In discussions, you represent your own opinion in a distinct manner. With a great deal of enthusiasm, you can convince others of your views. However, you sometimes know what is right and wrong almost too well, cling to your viewpoints, or richly elaborate your narrations and sometimes shamelessly lie through your teeth. You have abundant powers of imagination and certainly don't lack in ideas. But working plans out in detail is not really your cup of tea. It's possible that you are already mentally involved in your next project by then.

Mercury in the Fourth House

Interest in the Realm of the Family

Above all, you apply communication, thought, and knowledge in a family-like and domestic area. It's easier for you to talk to others in a familiar atmosphere than among strangers. If the surroundings appeal to you, then you can really "thaw out," start telling stories, and establish a very warm and hearty contact with other people.

This type of information exchange within a circle of friends and acquaintances will probably give you more knowledge than studying books. In order to optimally deal with what you have learned, you need a family-like climate. You mentally grapple with emotional concerns like the family, the home, a sense of security, and your origins. Psychology, educational issues, or housing construction may possibly interest you.

Mercury/Jupiter in Conjunction

Capable of Broadminded Thought

You like dramatic stories, and you can tell them in an optimistic and broadminded manner, depicting a journey or experience in the most scintillating colors. There are many things that you have actually experienced, and the rest you like to embroider somewhat. When you begin to speak about something, it's completely possible that you can hardly be stopped because of your enthusiasm. People probably are fascinated as they listen, even if they know that perhaps not everything should be taken literally. Your generous, jovial manner of thinking and speaking opens many doors for you. You are capable of enthusiasm and can also inspire others. You have a considerable amount of rhetorical talent at your disposal.

It's possible that you have thoughts about the meaning of life on your mind. You attempt to think as comprehensively as possible and get a general view of things. You have a broad variety of interests and want to dedicate yourself to meaningful ideas. Sharing knowledge in a humorous and optimistic manner probably gives you a sense of meaning and satisfaction.

Mercury/Saturn in Tension

High Demands on Thinking and Speaking

You place high demands on your thinking and knowledge, hardly permitting yourself to say anything wrong. You possibly prefer to hold back and remain silent. As a child, you perhaps often heard statements like: "You don't understand that!" or "You didn't say that right" or "You have to learn that better!" You have taken over the demands that your parents and teachers placed on you as your guiding principles and saddled yourself with them.

You subject everything related to thinking, knowledge, and communication to critical examination. From yourself and others, you demand structure and objectivity in this area. This inner standard of perfection can either completely paralyze you, according to the motto of "I'll never be able to do that!" or spur you on to enormous achievements. Then you learn with thoroughness and endurance, acquiring knowledge with a solid basis for yourself. If you practice it, your expectation of never saying anything wrong can give you the ability to formulate your thoughts in an objective and structured manner. Through this systematic, thorough way of thinking and learning, you ultimately become an expert authority; it also gives you a sense of security and satisfaction.

RELATIONSHIPS AND ESTHETICS

When Venus sparkles in the sky as the morning or evening star, it is an expression of harmony and beauty in terms of reality and as an astrological symbol. It stands for the need to be balanced and have things in common, for the striving to build bridges. It is a distinctly feminine and erotic principle and corresponds to the aspect within us that longs for a partner, seeks and creates relationships, and can be open for and enjoy all the beauty in life. The Venus in us chooses what is appropriate and agreeable for us from the diversity of people and things.

Venus in Libra

Togetherness in Love and Harmony

With your sociable, polite, and poised manner, you are very popular. You emphasize what you have in common with other people and what connects you in your exchange with them; this ability wins many friends for you. You endeavor to design life in a harmonious way. Harmony is also important to you in terms of your partnership. You want to be appreciated and loved and therefore attempt to please your partner at all times and under any circumstances. In the process, you easily become tempted to adapt too much.

In order for you to feel happy, it's important for your partner to be happy as well. Joy shared is joy doubled, and a sorrow shared is a sorrow halved. You appreciate what you have in common and strongly experience yourself through the partner. You personify style and culture, value harmonious forms and color combinations, and have good taste. In addition, you possess the ability of seeing beauty in art and nature. Beauty is associated with harmony and peace for you. Balanced proportions particularly catch your eye, and you experience them as sensory pleasure.

Venus in the Third House

Encounters within the Cultural Framework

You need a great many people around you with whom you can have conversations and discuss a thousand things. With your partner, you would like to talk about mutual interests, cultural occasions, and current events. Intensity in a relationship is probably less important to you than a good comradely conversation. You also like a cultural or intellectual environment and appreciate the beauty of the language. Or, if this doesn't apply, a hidden streak within you longs for this.

The joy of flirting can also be a reason for you to start a relationship. The better you train your own taste, get a bit of culture here and do something there for the sake of it, the more enjoyable life will become. For you, harmony includes something light and bright with a great deal of variety. This applies to relationships, as well as everything else that makes life beautiful and pleasant.

With great probability, the type of woman who fascinates you personifies many of these qualities. This means you like flexible, intellectual, and verbally skilled women who bring a lively exchange of thoughts and companionship into the relationship.

*Venus/Mars in TensionThe Field of Tension Between Closeness and Assertion

Closeness and assertion seem like opposite poles to you. You want to assert yourself and simultaneously fear destroying the peace as a result. When you experience a great deal of closeness, things get too constricted for you and you feel robbed of your freedom. If you assert yourself and go your own way, you painfully miss a harmonious relationship with a partner. Perhaps you oscillate back and forth between the two extremes; a few days, weeks, or years with a great deal of closeness alternate with a period of confrontation, assertion, and being yourself.

You require a great deal of freedom in a partnership, such as an apartment of your own. Don't try to share everything with a partner but keep a private area for yourself, go out and do things alone or with friends, or clearly separate your working life from the partnership. The need to be loved can't always easily be harmonized with your sexual desires either; this may manifest itself in maintaining sexual relationships with other partners outside of your love relationship. Since the assertion pole is naturally more fitting for you as a man, it may easily be possible that you completely identify with this aspect and look for a nice, affectionate partner who lives out the harmony pole for you.

*Venus/Pluto in TensionHow Much Intensity Can a Relationship Tolerate?

Superficial relationships don't appeal to you; you seek intensity and passion. Power games may also sneak in quite easily since you want to bind your partner to you and make her dependent on you. At the same time, you entangle yourself in an emotional web. You are unaccustomed to a balance of powers with mutual trust and find it difficult to achieve.

Above all, your strong erotic and sexual aura has an attracting effect on people who are not willing to surrender to you and strongly challenge you in the area of emotions and sexuality; they may even attempt to also dominate you. Since the theme of power and control is deeply ingrained within you, you also react with tug-of-wars, intrigues, or jealousy and make sure there is stormy intensity.

A certain fear of losing your partner can cause you to do a great deal for her. According to the motto of "everything has its price," you believe that you must prove you are worthy of her love. This may become a strong motivation for a professional career or some other goal. However, you are challenged to reduce your reserve and need to be in control and get totally involved in the relationship. This is probably difficult for you to do. Such inner barriers can only be dissolved step by step in a process that takes years. At the same time, the experience of an increasing depth of emotion can enrich your partnership in many ways.

ACTIONS AND ASSERTION

Mars symbolizes masculinity and physical strength, as well as the capacity to take action and be assertive. It represents the part of our personality that is active in the outer world and wants to cause things to happen, that makes decisions and simply does things without asking, and that doesn't shy away from conflicts or confrontations. If something doesn't suit us, this is the part within us that defends itself and, if necessary, reacts with aggression and anger.

Mars in Capricorn

Purposeful Actions

You act in a matter-of-fact and purposeful manner. Your activities are reminiscent of the prudent and guiding authority of a father. You are aware of the responsibility for your actions and prefer time-tested and conventional methods. If something contradicts social rules, you don't particularly want to do it. Whenever possible, you set yourself a clear goal that you can translate step by step into action with endurance and determination. In the process, you can mobilize ambition and vigor to achieve whatever you have planned to do. Even if the outer circumstances change, you don't like to deviate from your line. In extreme cases, you imperturbably follow your path according to the motto: the end justifies the means. You also tend to be rather serious and strict with yourself and don't have much time for fun and games.

You see hierarchies and structures as necessary preconditions for the functioning of a society. You recognize people with authority and strive for such a position yourself. This means you are in demand for working situations where reliability, impartiality, and endurance are required.

Mars in the Fifth House

Creative Ventures Are Demanded

You are competitive and spontaneous. Or you would like to be. You would like to show your strength and ability to take action. You love playing. Even work has a playful element for you. You don't see things too much from the serious side but approach a situation with quite a willingness to take a risk. Being on the move, taking action, and causing something to happen gives you a feeling of liveliness. You are proud of what you achieve and express, and would presumably even enjoy exhibiting it on stage.

There is an adventurous and playful rascal hiding within you. You like competing with others. A great deal of energy is at your disposal, and you would like to use it creatively. For example, an athletic activity with a competitive character could be quite enjoyable for you.

*Mars/Pluto in TensionEnergy with Passion

You have a tremendous potential of energy that lies dormant within you like a volcano. Your activities have something passionate and sometimes also compulsive or destructive about them, which should be accepted and directed in the appropriate channels. You can be quite ambitious, uncompromising, and immune to stress, seeing a project through with iron toughness. Showing your own faults and weaknesses is something that you don't like to do. You go all out, in both your working life and in your sexual life. You can be distinctly harsh with yourself and others. The positive aspect of this character trait is an unusual ability to deal with stress. Less pleasant - above all, for the surrounding world - is the inconsideration that sometimes accompanies this, excessive ambition, and an almost compulsive need to control others. It's important here to counteract this and bring your own actions in harmony with the greater whole. Don't just elbow your way, but also direct your own strength so that it benefits everyone.

The gift of this quality is a tremendous and outstanding energy and productivity. The difficulty is properly channeling this energy; for example, into the high demands of professional or athletic achievements and, last but not least, into an intense and fulfilling sexual life.

THE SEARCH FOR MEANING AND GROWTH

Jupiter symbolizes the optimist in us, the part that wants meaning and expansion and sometimes gets out of control. It lets us look out for something higher and rise above the banalities of everyday life. It symbolizes the part in us that creates a relationship between things. It fills sober reality with a meaning by apportioning significance to each thing and imparting symbolic content to situations, words, and deeds.

Jupiter in the Fourth House

Growth in a Family-Like Environment

You love a wide, spacious home and feel good when you have enough space around you. You experience your family as a fertile ground for intellectual and emotional growth. Above all, babies and small children give you a feeling of inner expansiveness. Your interaction with children is correspondingly relaxed and warmhearted. Your house is probably open to others, and anyone is welcome. You create space for different opinions and practically bring the wide world into the family by welcoming people from foreign cultures into your home, for example.

Your positive attitude toward everything related to the home and family makes many things easier for you, including looking for a place to live. Without having to do much, you find what you are looking for. However, you expect that people accommodate you in many ways. This attitude, which basically applies to your private life, should be countered with a good dose of reality.

Jupiter/Saturn in Tension

Ideals and Reality

It's difficult for you to reconcile reality on the one hand and your ideas of what life could offer on the other hand. In one way or another, it's hard for you to realistically appraise your ideas of what you would like to achieve in life and translate them into action step by step. Caution and an urge for expansion inhibit each other. When you represent a practical and realistic policy, you tend to prefer a banal life with a secure and regular income over the realization of your ideals. In the process, the issue of meaning becomes increasingly urgent with the passing years. If you are on the more optimistic side, you will tend to live from hand to mouth and wait for great happiness without being disciplined enough to take the necessary steps yourself.

You are challenged to reduce reality and vision, your own behavior in everyday life and your philosophy of life, to a common denominator. In order for your ideas to become more than just castles in the air, you must think them through thoroughly and change them until they are in the realm of the possible. At the same time, you need to take concrete steps in order to translate an idea into reality bit by bit. This is the only way that a life philosophy can be brought into harmony with reality.

THE SEARCH FOR STRUCTURE AND ORDER

Saturn symbolizes the raised index finger within us, the inner authority with which we set ourselves boundaries and demand structure and responsibility from ourselves. The Saturn aspect within us is often very rigid, and then we block ourselves. However, if we have learned during the course of the years to reduce our fears and our standards of perfection, we will primarily experience Saturn as inner stability and security. In both the concrete and figurative sense, it symbolizes our backbone.

Saturn in the Seventh House

The Demands of a Perfect Relationship

Above all, your need for structure and a sense of security is given an opportunity in relationships. A partnership isn't a frivolous matter for you; instead, it's something serious and long-term from which one doesn't run away at the first sign of problems. Relationships are meant to provide security and support. This is why social norms, like a marriage license, are probably important to you.

Your ideas of "people should do this" and "people should act like that" could constrict life together and lead to restrictions and frustrations. A frequent stereotyped idea is usually the unconscious assumption that the one person is responsible for this area and the other is responsible for that area. Without putting it into words, the roles of the partners are assigned. The one partner assumes the responsibility, and the partnership occasionally resembles a parent-child relationship. In the process, it petrifies into role behavior. True closeness and encountering each other are only possible in a limited way. You may feel this as something like sand in the gears; things "grind and drag." If you accept the challenge of working on a relationship and don't give in to the temptation of blaming your partner for the "sand," you will learn to replace the outer "people should" framework with inner stability. The more self-assurance you develop, the better you can bring your need for seriousness, permanence, and faithfulness into a relationship without subjecting it to a rigid framework at the same time.

Saturn/Uranus in a Harmonious Aspect

Between Tradition and Progress

On the one hand, you need a secure, structured life; on the other hand, you yearn to develop your own individuality. You see the value of things that are well-proven and, at the same time, the possibilities that the future bears. Although you stand between two opposite contrasts as a result, you usually make a good choice and change what needs to be changed while preserving what gives life stability and security.

You have a strong desire to combine the old with the new. Your innate ability to respect both makes it possible for you to have a trailblazing effect. You possess a fine aptitude of differentiating between what is old and outdated and what is lasting. With this ability and a sure instinct, you find the happy medium between tradition and progress.

THE NEED FOR CHANGE

Uranus symbolizes the "wind spirit" within us that strives for psychological growth through constant change. It stirs up an inner unrest that drives us to set out time and again, that lets us seek variety and new experiences, and that keeps us from psychological and physical stagnation. It represents the wanderer within us who does not settle down for long anywhere. When something has barely become a habit, he tears down his tents and surprises us with new ideas. His originality knows no limits, and the same applies to his noncommittal nature.

Uranus in the Ninth House

An Unconventional World View

Do you disagree with the traditional education systems? Or do you want to change the social or political structures? You have a "reforming vein." Old and outdated perspectives in society are a thorn in your eye. You are interested in progressive ideas and unusual areas of study. In matters of faith, you are also skeptical toward the traditional direction or even reject it completely. It is important to you to develop an ideology through your own perceptions and not accept a ready-made one from a guru. Others may judge your ideas as eccentric, but these mental experiments offer you new insights that can enrich your life. You are probably open to and tolerant of different opinions. However, you do not easily let yourself be swayed from your own convictions.

If you like to travel, you prefer spontaneous decisions to long-term planning. You appreciate it when something is happening, and you will probably experience surprises time and again when you are abroad.

THE LONGING FOR LIBERATION AND DEVOTION

Neptune symbolizes our mystical side that continually dissolves the boundaries between our ego-consciousness and the outside world, reminding us that we are part of a greater whole. This part lets us feel the longing for another world. It can equally be the motivation for reconnecting with something divine, for total devotion and a readiness to help, or for retreating from life and losing ourselves, which ultimately results in self-pity and chaos.

Neptune in the First House

Resonating with the Surrounding World

You have the tendency to adapt to and resonate with your surrounding world. The role that you assume lets your character traits appear soft and without any sharp edges, similar to a landscape behind a pane of frosted glass. You are easily overlooked or wrongly assessed. You go into the outside world, show who you are, and presumably discover that the surrounding world hardly takes notice of you; for example, when you would like to be waited on in a store. If there are other customers waiting at the same time, you will probably often have the experience of either having to defend yourself or being the last person to receive attention. You may be annoyed and expend a great deal of energy to draw attention to yourself.

Other people often see completely differing character traits in you. You can be compared with a chameleon because you appear to be different depending upon the background that you are in front of at the moment. You are difficult for your fellow human beings to grasp. People never know exactly how you really are. You may observe that you behave differently with each person who you are with.

You take in other people's moods and adapt to them. You are probably always willing to help others, are very quick to say yes, and may possibly feel taken advantage of. It is important that you continually ask yourself what you want and what the others want. Otherwise, you will often notice after the fact that you actually had intended something completely different than you expressed. The more you develop a stable sense of self and set up boundaries to the outside world, the less you will be overwhelmed by external moods. This will allow you to develop sensitivity and compassion without losing yourself in others.

The absorption of every mood also has a very beautiful positive aspect to it: You have the gift of perceiving beauty in nature, art, and music. You virtually resonate with every mood, whether it is joy, beauty, or annoyance. You can empathize with the carefreeness and cheerfulness of young children to the same extent as with the suffering of the sick.

THE "DARK" SIDE

Pluto symbolizes the most radical, energized, and passionate aspect of our personality that, especially because it is so bent on "all or nothing," also triggers fear. So we often feel this side of ourselves to be "dark" and inwardly turn away from it. Then we suppress this intensive part with somewhat the same effect as pressing a lid onto a pot with boiling water: We burn our fingers. We can only find an access to its power and liveliness when we accept this uncompromising and intensive part of ourselves and learn to deal with it. Then this aspect in particular can develop an enormous energy potential and lead us through and beyond profound crises.

Friends and Groups as a Challenge

You do not like to be one of many. And yet, you presumably shy away from showing off and being conspicuous because of your uniqueness. In groups and with a circle of friends, you quickly feel oppressed. The group dynamic both fascinates and frightens you. If you can succeed in showing yourself completely as you are within groups and recognizing the others as equal individuals, you can discover within yourself a source of strength and energy through teamwork or activities within groups.

At the same time, the issue of power is certain to come to the fore time and again. Equally possible is a passionate measuring of strength, the feeling of being inferior, or - when you have largely developed your corresponding abilities in this respect - the skill to be a powerful and dynamic group leader.

Even friendships often have a profound, if not magical, aspect. Dependency, power, and helplessness are touchy subjects that contribute to profound experiences time and again. You have a considerable influence on your friends. Its healing effect can develop when you personally recognize all of the wishes characterized by ambition and can put them aside.

These pages aren't meant to say: "This is how you are! You do this and that, and this is how you think," even if the formulation sometimes may give this impression. These pages contain an overview of the symbolism of the planets, as they stood in the heavens at the time and place of your birth. According to experience and statistics, there are parallels between the planetary constellations and character traits. We can use these as guides through the countless aspects of our own personality, more consciously recognizing our motivations and behavior patterns with their help.

These pages are meant to give you more clarity and some sudden insights about yourself, as well as accompany you on a portion of your path in life.
